Football Betting Odds

Betting odds are incredibly important in the world of football, they 0 tell you who the favourite is for major competitions such as the Premier League and UEFA Champions League. However, that's 0 not all they are good for, they help you find value in your bets, if you're backing a 1/100 bet, 0 it may be very likely to win but no matter your stake, it is likely that you'll make only pennies 0 from the bet unless you placed a substantial stake. Odds allow you to find the best priced odds and you 0 can utilise your knowledge of a sport to determine the best value for money bets. However, odds can come in 0 several formats, they are:

Decimal Odds

Fractional Odds

American Odds

Decimal betting odds are one of the most popular formula of betting odds in 0 both Europe and Oceania. Decimal odds represent the total amount that will be returned to you, including your original stake, 0 if your bet is successful. The odds are expressed as a decimal number, typically greater than 1. The calculation to 0 determine your potential winnings is straightforward: you multiply your stake by the decimal odds.

For example: the calculation that can be used is: Potential winnings = Stake x Decimal odds = £10 x 2.50 = £25

In this example, if the team you backed wins the match, you would receive £25, which includes your initial £10 stake and £15 in profit.

Fractional odds on the other hand are the traditional format of betting odds in the United Kingdom and Ireland.

Fractional odds consist of two numbers separated by a "/", an example of this is 10/1 or 5/2. The number on the left side represents the potential profit of the bet while the number on the right side demonstrates the amount you need to bet.

American odds,

also known as moneyline odds, are a popular method of representing betting odds primarily used in the United States. They indicate the amount of money you would need to wager or the amount you could potentially win on a particular bet. American odds can be displayed in two formats: positive (+) and negative (-).

For positive odds:

Potential profit = (Stake / 100) x Odds Total payout = Stake + Potential profit

For

negative odds: Potential profit = (100 / Odds) x Stake Total payout = Stake + Potential profit

Football Betting Markets

Look at statistics for the league you're looking to back and see what best suits that 0 competition. For example, the Championship is known for being widely unpredictable in the early season but after 10 or so 0 games, you can typically see which teams will go on a long winning run. For example, if you look at 0 the latter part of last season, at the start of the campaign, many backed Nottingham Forest to be easily relegated 0 and their early form backed that. However, after they started winning a few games, it looked like they would win 0 successive games all season long.

Teams to Score is an 0 essential market for football bettors. Placing a bet on this means that you are expecting both teams to score in 0 a single game. There are also more advanced options, such as both teams to score in both halves or in 0 a singular half. For individual games, the football odds will be low for Both Team to Score markets but, when 0 combined into an accumulator, this is when players may find the odds significantly increase. However, generally, Both Teams To Score 0 bets provide low online football betting odds.

Draw No Bet - A Draw No Bet placed on a team to win 0 will return your stake if the team draws. If the team wins, you will win as normal, and if the 0 team loses, then so will your bet.

In-game Betting Markets

Can football betting be profitable?

Of course, if you place the correct bets 0 football betting can be profitable. However, the odds are put in place for a reason. Bets such as accumulators have 0 a low chance of coming off which is demonstrated in the subsequent odds. If you regularly place bets, you'll know 0 there are fine margins between winning and losing bets, so wins or 'profitability' can't ever be guaranteed.

However, to maximise your 0 chances of winning, we recommend checking out the various football betting tips on Bet UK which can provide tips on 0 all competitions from the Premier League to the Bundesliga.

Meanwhile, decimal odds are semi-popular and 0 American odds are virtually non-existent amongst football fans. If you're ever checking out tips for the likes of the Europa 0 League and other competitions across Europe, you'll find

Which football bet is the easiest to win?

When you look at the betting markets offered on our football betting sportsbook.

There are a number of betting markets that can prove to be 'easier' to win. These include the double chance, goals and win markets. Double chance is the betting market where you'll be on 2/3's of the potential options with significantly lower odds, so if you had Manchester City Vs Newcastle United and you placed a bet on Manchester City to win or a draw, the odds would be significantly higher in your favour for success but this also means your profit margins will be smaller. Goals are the betting market that many seem to prefer as there are a wide variety of options and in an entertaining game, these markets can provide fantastic value for money.

What football bet is the hardest to win?

The correct score betting is arguably the hardest bet to win when looking at football betting markets in the United Kingdom, this is because it requires precision, sitting and waiting for goals to go in isn't a bad option. However, a correct score bet can be ruined in 10 seconds. For example, when Arsenal played Bournemouth, the most popular correct score was 2-0 but Philip Billing scored early on meaning Arsenal's clean sheet was wiped out and all bets with a correct score with Bournemouth not to score was wiped out within seconds.

What is the 90-minute rule in football betting?

The

90-minute rule applies to most bets in football. This is the process that your bet must win or be settled within 90 minutes (injury time included) to payout. So, for example, if you back a winner in the Champions League final and it goes to extra time, you would only receive a payout if you backed a draw, no matter what the score is after 120 minutes as once the second half had finished, the score was level.
