Vida precária de entregadores brasileiros bolão da quina online Bristol

Two rows of shabby and poorly constructed caravans stretch along a path next to the main road that leads to the center of Bristol. Rats run between concrete gutters full of water next to piles of vegetation covered in trash. Drug users exit the underground as trucks pass overhead.

This is the gloomy campsite where about 30 Brazilian delivery workers who work for large companies like Deliveroo and Uber Eats are forced to live to survive.

Celia Campos, 45 years old, lives in a caravan next to the gutters for a year. "We left Brazil looking for something better", she says. "But the majority of us can't realize these dreams. We ended up in a worse state than when we left."

It has become much more difficult for delivery workers to make a living with food deliveries, as they claim that their earnings do not cover the rising costs.

While the national minimum wage is £11.44 per hour, food delivery companies like Deliveroo and Uber Eats do not formally employ their workers. Instead, they are gig economy workers, paid per individual delivery. This means that workers can end up earning much less than the minimum wage.

Trabalho árduo e baixo pagamento

Campos works long hours for both companies and says she worked 333 hours in July, earning the equivalent of £6.27 per hour. Her payment records show she only received £1.20 for some Uber Eats deliveries. "We spend as much time as possible on the streets. I work from 8 AM until I'm exhausted... usually until midnight", she says. "The work is not good. You have to be a slave to earn enough."

She cannot afford the high rents in Bristol, which have risen much faster than in other parts of the country and, consequently, have led to an increase in the number of vehicles parked in the West of England.

The difficult living conditions, long working hours and low pay lead to problemas de saúde mental no acampamento. "Fiquei deprimida por um ano. Foi horrível", diz Campos. "Não desejo isso para ninguém. Se você trabalhar, trabalhar, trabalhar e não tiver vida... é aí que a depressão vem."

A Deliveroo, que recentemente resistiu a um desafio legal de sete anos para garantir mais direitos aos entregadores do economia de gigs, registrou seu primeiro lucro este mês, relatando ganhos líquidos de £1,3 milhões no primeiro semestre de 2024.
