My Actions and Consequences

Um fim de semana quente de primavera incentiva reuniões noturnas no quintal

A warm Saturday night in spring is enough for me to dream of dinners in the garden. I'm not talking about solitary walks at night with a drink and a pair of tongs (we're going to bet while paying a pruning regime of dead flowers, when the best ornamental plants produce another flowering as the spent flowers are removed). It's very pleasant, but I'm referring to those sarais that unfold at night starting from late afternoon deliciously as they transform into a bet while paying convivio under the open sky.

I like to receive guests in the garden. There are various reasons: it's more practical – when I lived in a bet while paying a crowded house in London there was a 9 decade, the parties were always in the garden, because cleanliness never required scrubbing the floor. But it's also magical: something about the light of candles in a bet while paying a dark garden that you simply can't get inside the house.

I already receive small dinners in bet while paying balconies, where the best place to put your feet was on the iron walks. In fact, I even got a bet while paying engagement in bet while paying my balcony, over champagne glasses, everything that the mobile table was capable of holding. The spirit – and the rehearsals – remain the same: candles in bet while paying jars, food that resists heating, and a good conversation.

Don't worry too much about the state of the garden. After dusk, no one can see if you cut the roses or not.

A good table and comfortable seats will help people settle in. I sacrifice a bed of flowers in a sunny balcony since last year and I don't regret it; it supports a half dozen of people around an old chimney with a marble top in bet while paying above. Tables, benches and stools can be stored when you want to reconquer the lawn. Vintage tablecloths, not precious, can deal with spilled wax and add a touch of occasion.

Don't worry too much about the state of the garden. It can sound like a contradiction, but if the food and conversation are good, it doesn't matter; and after dusk no one can see if you cut the roses or not.

What matters more is good lighting – so that people can see where they are passing – and cheer. Lighting can vary from backlit, be they buried in the garden or in bet while paying walls (I like the Pooky stock), or, in a simpler way, lit by solar energy that can be moved. Paper balloons are economical and look beautiful hanging in bet while paying trees.

Planters with summer plants that radiate cheer at night – like Nicotiana glauca, radish, phlox-at-night or jasmine-at-night – placed in bet while paying around doors and living areas can transform outdoor scenarios usually routine into bet while paying events. In the end, have a reserve of covers at hand: no one wants to be sent inside when it's cold – and cleaning the living room with a headache is uncomfortable.
